- In March 1953 Communist authorities in Kwangtung were planning to train 2,000 police cadres to improve the efficiency of the Kwangtung police. A rigid training program was to be undertaken at the Kwangtung Police Training School. This school was under the command of HSU Tung-sheng (1776/2639/3932), a native of Shantung.
- There were to be 500 students in each class. Candidates were to be chosen by police or organizations, agricultural associations, and labor unions from among their membership. Each class was to last for three months.
- In order to be qualified to enter the school, a candidate had to be between the ages of 18 and 25 and be a graduate of a primary school. In addition each candidate had to be guaranteed by two members of the police. Persons who served in the police under the Nationalist regime were not qualified to become trainees.
